Individual Income Tax

Adjustments to the Federal Income Tax Deduction for Individuals Impacted by Hurricane Ida
Act 434 of the 2023 Regular Legislative Session

The purpose of this bulletin is to explain the impact of recent legislation to the federal income tax deduction for individuals impacted by Hurricane Ida.

Federal Tax Relief

Under federal law, affected taxpayers in a federally declared disaster area have the option of claiming disaster-related casualty losses on their federal income tax return for either the year in which the event occurred or the prior year. If the individual elects to claim the loss in the prior year, the individual amends the prior year income tax return to claim a federal tax refund attributable to the disaster loss.¹

Federal Tax Relief Impact to Louisiana Tax

As a general rule, if a Louisiana individual income taxpayer amends his or her federal income tax return, the taxpayer is required to amend the Louisiana income tax return. The reason for the requirement to amend the Louisiana income tax return is because the Louisiana income tax return largely piggybacks the federal income tax return. For instance, a change in federal income tax liability as a result of an amended federal income tax return changes the Louisiana income tax deduction for federal income tax liability.

Specific to personal casualty losses, an amended federal income tax return that increases the deduction for personal casualty losses related to Hurricane Ida, a qualified major disaster, reduces federal income tax liability. This reduction in federal income tax liability results in a reduced Louisiana income tax deduction for federal income tax liability. As the Louisiana income tax deduction for the federal income tax liability decreases, the Louisiana income tax liability increases.

State Tax Relief

To avoid this result, Act 434 of the 2023 Regular Legislative Session provides state specific relief to accompany the federal relief. Based on the relief provisions of Act 434, Louisiana individuals are generally not required to file amended 2020 or 2021 Louisiana income tax returns if the only reason for the amended federal income tax return was to claim the federal relief provisions for personal casualty losses related to Hurricane Ida.

However, taxpayers may amend their Louisiana individual income tax returns to claim a larger excess federal itemized personal deduction allowed pursuant to R.S. 47:293(9)(a)(xi)² and claim the additional refund that may be due. The original federal income tax liability remains the same on the amended Louisiana return.³

For taxpayers claiming the personal casualty losses related to Hurricane Ida on the 2020 or 2021 federal individual income tax return, when completing the 2020 or 2021 Louisiana individual income tax return, the taxpayer will compute the federal return without the personal casualty loss and report that federal income tax liability as the federal income tax deduction.
